

IAM 2010: Access across the generations

Darwin Breakfast seminar: What's the goss on Web2 social media technologies?

With all the debate and hype, can you afford not to know more about the new social media that is increasingly becoming part of our daily personal and working lives? Is your workplace using or banning social media forms? What are your issues and concerns? Come to the breakfast seminar, listen to different perspectives and join a discussion to shed more light on the practical implications for archives and records and communication

What's the goss on Web2 social media technologies?

Anthony Hornby, Charles Darwin University

Anthony Hornby is the Associate Director, Library Resources and Technology Library and Information Access at Charles Darwin University. Anthony will explore some of the current issues and uses with social media, including LinkedIn, Twitter, blogs, wikis and anything else that has appeared by May – who knows? He will discuss how they are being used in different contexts for personal use, study and in the workplace. The Prime Minister of Australia has some 900,000 Twitter followers, so the community is engaging in these social media for government and business purposes, not just for social use. Anthony will then lead an interactive discussion to explore your experiences, concerns and questions and find out how other workplaces are responding.

This technology is not likely to go away and is not a generation specific fad, so we need to stay up to date. Come along and get a clearer picture of where this is all heading and how your colleagues are interacting with it all.
